How She Snared Him.

[Original.]

We were sitting in the arbor under the grapes, which were quite ripe. We plucked and ate a number of huge bunches; then she asked what we should do next. "Oh, I know," and she ran into the house and brought out a book. On the left page were a number of printed questions; on the right, blank spaces in which to write the answers. It was impossible to determine which were the more stupid, the questions or the answers that had been written in it. The book was about half filled, the writers having been both masculine and feminine.

I ran my eye down the column of questions, such as "What is your favorite color? Your favorite proverb? Your age?" When I came to the last I paused and asked if the women answered that question. She said only one had, but she didn't count; she was a practical creature and earned her own living. I went on down the list. "Is life worth living?" Think of that to be answered by people from sixteen to twenty-six, as most of those who had filled in the answers were. "What is your present thought?" I paused again and began to write, "That the man who"— She stopped me.

"Don't write anything disagreeable. I won't have my book spoiled."

I had intended to write, "The man who got up this book did so for idiots and to fill his pocket at their expense." Instead I wrote, "The man who is asked to write in this book should feel highly complimented."

"That's very nice," she said. "I know how cynical you are, and I feared you were going to put in something horrid."

My second thought was that I had narrowly escaped making an ass of myself.

I went on down the list and paused at "What is your ambition?" These questions were goading me to ruin, and again I came near making a slip. I started in to write "To drink all the champagne there is in the world," but caught myself when I had written "To drink" and finished "dew from your sweet lips." I had no sooner written this, which I had considered a high flown compliment, when I realized that it was tantamount to a declaration. She was looking over my shoulder, and to get a glimpse of her face I turned my head. My beard came in contact with the almost invisible down on her cheek.

"Oh!" she exclaimed.

"Excuse me," I said.

The glimpse I got satisfied me that I had stepped off the river bottom and must swim. I was startled at the discovery, had never been before beyond my depth and an indifferent swimmer at that. Still I confess I had been paddling around the girl who was about to —well, to drown me. She says I'm cynical, and I suppose I am, though I am somewhat excusable in this instance, for the word "drown" carries out my simile. I struck out wildly.

"That won't do," I said, "in a book to be seen by any and every body. They might think—I mean—while it's true it's—shall I scratch it out?"

"Oh!"

This was no reply to my question, but it expressed a lot. Others may not understand what it meant, but I did. I was rattled. I made a dash for the next question and read aloud, "Do you consider marriage a failure?"

I wanted to write as I felt. "I wish I knew which it will be for me if I settle this matter now," but of course I couldn't write that, so I temporized and a man who temporizes with the girl he courts is lost—that is, if marriage is a failure. I wrote, "It depends upon whether one gets a good wife."

It's a wonder she didn't laugh when she saw what I had written, but she didn't. This was a serious business.

"Don't you think that a one sided view to take of it?" she said in a soft voice.

"Upon my word!" I exclaimed. I was getting more and more rattled every moment. "I'll fix it," and I wrote on— "but in this case"— I stopped again.

"What case?" she asked in the same soft tone.

"Why, the case we were talking—weren't we talking about a case? So we weren't. How stupid!"

"Oh!"

What a convenient word and how a girl can use it! I've since tried it myself, but without the slightest effect. Think of a man using it and without the softness of voice, the surprise in the eyes, the injured look about the mouth. One might as well expect a woman to produce an effect by the use of a swear word. And yet this girl was snaring me with it.

"You seem to think"— I began and paused. Yes, she thought, and she had a right to think, but what I was about to say wouldn't help matters. She didn't say "Oh!" I wished she would, or anything to start me afresh. I turned to the book for a way out. "What is your favorite method of proposal?"

The question must have been put in for the women, and women who were flirts at that. A man might have a favorite beverage, but never a favorite method of proposal. But with me all had depended on the nature of this next question, and it had gone against me. I surrendered at discretion. I wrote deliberately:

"A man should simply say: I love you. Will you be my wife?" Then I turned and looked her square in the face.

She's got her question book yet, but keeps it under lock and key.

EDGAR T. EVANS.

The Conquest Of Cutler.

By LOUISE MERRIFIELD.

Copyrighted, 1907, by P. C. Eastment.

Tennant saw her first when she rounded the hotel point and headed for the open bay. She was alone, but the little naphtha launch belonged to Cutler. There was no mistaking that. With its polished brass rails, its red morocco cushions and its trim, slender lines, it was the smartest bit of sailing craft on Lake Glenora.

And for over three weeks Muriel Arden had had the sole exclusive use of it and had exercised the privilege at every opportunity. To Tennant it was more than mere girlish willfulness. It was frankly flaunting in his face her conquest of Cutler and her defiance of himself and preference for things belonging to said Cutler.

He watched her as she neared the pier. If she saw the tall, moody figure in gray flannels, she made no sign. Hatless, the wind blowing her brown hair back from her tanned, clear cut face, she held her way steadily toward the open bay, one hand on the little brass tipped pilot wheel, and looked neither to the right nor the left.

Phil Tennant muttered something under his breath and turned quickly on his heel toward the hotel. It was after 7. If he hurried, he could still catch the night boat for Chicago. Perhaps he could even get away before she returned. It was growing late. Up at the hotel they were lighting the colored Japanese lanterns around the verandas. There was to be a hop that night. He remembered Muriel had told him she was going to it with Cutler. He avoided the main entrance, with its palms and pretty girls, and slipped up to his own room to pack his suit cases. On the way upstairs he met Cutler, who looked anxious and annoyed.

"Did you see the little girl anywhere?"

Tennant turned on him hotly.

"Whom do you refer to?"

Cutler laughed easily, without malice, and ignored the resentment in the other's tone.

"There's a storm coming up, and I didn't want her to go out in my boat alone."

As he passed on downstairs leisurely Tennant paused and looked after him, his fists clenched tightly. He would have enjoyed flinging him down the whole flight for those words. "The little girl!" It was the easy proprietary familiarity that cut. That any man on earth should dare to use that tone in speaking of Muriel—his Muriel! Then like a flash came the memory of that straight, cold little figure in the launch as it had passed the pier, of the proud little face that would not turn his way, and he went on upstairs with a dogged, bitter sense of all things gone wrong. Perhaps she was Cutler's "little girl."

The Chicago boat was due at the Glenora at 8:30. At 8 the music of the Hungarian string orchestra came softly from the palm hidden ballroom. For a moment Tennant hesitated on the veranda listening to it. Muriel was in there, he thought. She had probably returned and was dancing, perhaps with Cutler, while he was going away from her forever. He had been a fool to come at all. It had been her half laughing challenge, that last night on the roof garden. They were with the Wilburton party. Cutler had been there also, but Muriel had sat next to Tennant, and he had fancied that last instant on the stairs that she had meant more than a mere flirtation when she had said she hoped he would be a member of the summer colony at Glenora.

He had taken her at her word and gone to Glenora, and what Miss Arden had begun on the roof garden she finished at Glenora. But Tennant was slow, slow to fall in love, slow to believe that he had the ghost of a chance with a girl like Muriel Arden, slower yet to risk that chance in one last throw. And while he had waited, sure of himself, but doubtful of Muriel, Cutler had come down with his launch, his motor car, his coach and all the other accessories of half a dozen million or so, and Muriel had seemed to waver.

The night air was still and heavy. Suddenly a sweep of cool, keen wind blew in freshly from the bay. It caught the frail Jap lanterns and tossed them like leaves to and fro. The bamboo curtains at the long French windows rustled and swung inward, and out on the lawn the palms and willows bent before it with a lithe, swift obeisance.

Tennant jammed his hat low over his eyes and started on a run for the pier. The rain splashed in his face, and a glare of dazzling light shot across the northwest heavens. He ran faster. If he could make the boathouse before the storm broke, he could take the steamer. Just as the thunder burst in a low report from the gray edged black clouds he passed Cutler's boathouse, and as the next flare of quick lightning came he saw that it was empty. The Nixie was gone from its place.

The pier was deserted except for a sleepy boy at the baggage shed. Tennant called for a boat, for anything that could ride through the black, rolling waves that licked along the piling by the dock. There was no time to get back to the hotel or to give the alarm for the life savers. Muriel was out there, out in the storm and the peril of the night alone, and he must go to her.

Shaking the boy, gripping him until he squealed with pain, Tennant wrung from him somehow that the only boat to be had was Cutler's electric motor boat, a small, low affair that only carried one, and that in fair weather.

"You ain't going out on Michigan with her, are you?" asked the boy. Tennant smiled grimly and sprang into the boat as the next wave lifted it up. It was a mere sliver of a thing, built on the lines of a racing shell. He had owned one of his own the previous summer and understood the mechanism. With the wind cutting sharply across his face he whipped cleanly out into the bay. Somewhere he would find her, he told himself, bending low over the little pilot wheel and holding his breath as the little boat took the water fairly. Cutler's boat! He laughed to himself. There was a certain fitness about the proceeding that pleased him.

Muriel had headed the Nixie due west, straight out through the narrow channel from little Lake Glenora into Lake Michigan. Two arms of land and rock stretched out to meet Michigan. On one, Rock point, stood the big summer resort hotel. The other was a long, barren waste of rocks that seemed endless when the lake was calm. One by one, overlapping each other, they lay from the beach far out into the bay like some gigantic necklace. The windstorm would catch the little launch before she could possibly reach the open channel, Tennant reasoned, and blow it over on the reef.

"Look out for the Chicago boat," shouted the deck boy after him. "She's coming down the lake now."

Tennant hardly heard him. The storm had broken in full force, and the tiny shell of a boat shivered and trembled like a frightened animal as he turned it into the channel. Straight for the reef he headed, but the waves were so high he could not even catch a glimpse of the chain of rocks, and suddenly a path of clear white light swung leisurely across the sky and flashed directly on the reef. It was the searchlight on the White City. Two things it showed Tennant in that single wave of light. Just ahead of him was Cutler's boat, riding the waves like a gull, dipping with every lurching swell and showing the next instant on the topmost crest. And it was directly in the course of the White City. And clinging to the little pilot wheel, striving to guide the launch back safely, was Muriel, her long dark hair loose and whipped by the wind across her face. Just for an instant he saw her, then the great arc of light had swept back to the far end of the little lake and all was blackness ahead.

Blindly Tennant drove the little motor boat forward, and suddenly side by side it crashed into the launch. For one instant the two touched, but in that instant Tennant had made the leap safely. Before he could recover his balance the motor boat had vanished like a leaf in the storm, and he was in the launch.

"Give me the wheel!" he said hoarsely. And as the White City swung by the Nixie rose on her swell, wave-swept and battered, but secure, with a strong hand on her little brass tipped pilot wheel.

"Phil, Phil, listen to me!" Down beside him in the boat knelt Muriel, white to her lips, but happy, happy in spite of the fact that they two had faced death together but an instant before. "Did we smash his old boat?"

"Absolutely." Tennant's arms tightened about her. The pilot wheel was very much in the way.

"I knew that you would come," she went on. "I saw you on the pier, but I thought you would come right away —that was why I went out alone."

And light dawned slowly on Tennant. It was his first lesson in the contradictions of Muriel.

"And I was going back on that boat tonight," he said.

Muriel laughed and pushed her wet hair back from her face.

"Mr. Cutler took that boat, Phil," she said.

Provocation Enough.

A deaf old gentleman dined with a family where grace was always said. When the guests were seated the host bowed his head and began to repeat the accustomed verse in a subdued, reverent tone.

"Eh? What's that?" demanded the deaf old gentleman, who sat beside him.

The host smiled patiently and began again in a louder, more deprecatory voice.

"Speak a little louder. I don't catch what you say," the old gentleman persisted.

A low ripple of laughter went around the table. The host, his face crimson with embarrassment, raised his voice and repeated the verse. The deaf gentleman did his best to hear, but failed. He placed one hand upon his host's arm.

"What did you say?" he demanded irascibly.

"Blast it, I'm saying grace," he snapped.—Lippincott's Magazine.

Felt Acquainted.

A Boston lady of the most reserved and exclusive type was waiting for her change at the glove counter in one of the large stores when she was approached by a very large, gaudily dressed and loud looking woman, who held out a pudgy hand and said:

"Why, how do you do, Mrs. Blank?"

Mrs. Blank ignored the proffered hand and, drawing herself up stiffly, said frigidly:

"I do not think that I know you, madam."

"No, I s'pose not," replied the woman, in nowise embarrassed by the coldness of her reception, "but I've knowed you by sight for a long time, and now I've got a hired girl who worked at your house once a year or two ago, and she's told me so much about you that I feel real well acquainted with you. Pleasant day, ain't it? Well, if she ain't polite to sail off without so much as a word! Shows her raisin', anyhow!"

THE MADSTONE.

Valuable Because Absorbent—A Clay Pipe Makes a Good One.

Physicians are often asked whether there really is any virtue in what are called madstones. One of them declares that these stones are of value, but that they would be of more value if their limitations were understood.

"There is no particular variety of stone or substance which may be designated exclusively as the madstone," he says. "I have seen many of them, so called, and no two were of exactly the same composition, geologically considered.

"Madstones act on the same principle that a blotting paper does when absorbing ink, and there is nothing that makes a better one than baked pipeclay. A new clay pipe, procurable for a cent at nearly any store where tobacco is sold, cannot be excelled by any madstone, no matter how great its reputation.

"The action can be clearly demonstrated by placing a common dry red brick in contact with the margin of a puddle of water and noticing what capillary attraction will accomplish. Therefore to be efficient the only necessity is for the stone to be porous and have strong adhesive and absorbent qualities. Nothing mysterious about it.

"I have seen several that appear to be concretions, either vesical, renal or biliary, and were found in the bladder, kidney or liver of some animal—those taken from the deer supposed to be the best.

"When a person is bitten by a reptile or dog supposed to be mad and the porous stone applied to the wound the blotting paper action begins, and the blood, saliva from the mouth of the animal and whatever poison these fluids contain will naturally by capillary attraction be absorbed by and into the substance applied, no matter what name you may give it.

"The saying that if a stone sticks the wound is poisonous and if it does not take hold there is no venom present is untrue. If the stone is clean and dry it will adhere when moisture is within reach till it becomes saturated.

"For instance, a new red brick will absorb one pint of water. After the venom has been taken into the circulation the madstone is worthless, but as the victim is usually filled with whisky or alcohol at the same time the stone is being used the spirits may counteract the effect of the poison.

"I know of a stone which has a wide reputation and makes a good living for the family owning it. They never let it go out of their sight, and when the victim cannot be taken to the stone one member of the family can be hired to take the stone to the victim. In addition to traveling expenses, they charge $5 for the application and $2 extra for each hour that the stone sticks.

"This stone is busy a large part of the time. Not long since the stone held to a man's leg for over 100 hours, yet the man died. His life could have been saved if dependence had not been placed entirely in the stone."—Medical Brief.

Tobacco Smoke Poisonous.

It is often said that tobacco smoke is a powerful germicide. The composition of tobacco smoke is complex, the principal constituents being oils of a tarry nature. Nicotine itself is a strong germicide, but the quantity of this poison in tobacco smoke is minute. The oily matter which accumulates in a tobacco pipe is highly poisonous, but does not contain any appreciable quantity of nicotine, the chief constituent of this residue being a very poisonous oil known as pyridine. Tobacco smoke contains a decided quantity of carbon monoxide, which is a preservative and which must possess germicidal properties. One of the principal constituents accounting for the germicidal properties of tobacco smoke is the powerful antiseptic formaldehyde.—New York Herald.

Do You Open Your Mouth

Like a young bird and gulp down whatever food or medicine may be offered you? Or, do you want to know something of the composition and character of that which you take into your stomach whether as food or medicine?

Most intelligent and sensible people nowadays insist on knowing what they employ whether as food or as medicine. Dr. Pierce believes they have a perfect right to insist upon such knowledge. So he publishes, broadcast and on each bottle-wrapper, what his medicines are made of and verifies it under oath. This he feels he can well afford to do because the more the ingredients of which his medicines are made are studied and understood the more will their superior curative virtues be appreciated.

For the cure of woman's peculiar weaknesses, irregularities and derangements, giving rise to frequent headaches, backache, dragging-down pain or distress in lower abdominal or pelvic region, accompanied, oftttimes, with a debilitating, pelvic, catarrhal drain and kindred symptoms of weakness, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a most efficient remedy. It is equally effective in curing painful periods, in giving strength to nursing mothers and in preparing the system of the expectant mother for baby's coming, thus rendering childbirth safe and comparatively painless. The "Favorite Prescription" is a most potent, strengthening tonic to the general system and to the organs distinctly feminine in particular. It is also a soothing and invigorating nervine and cures nervous exhaustion, nervous prostration, neuralgia, hysteria, spasms, chorea or St. Vitus's dance, and other distressing nervous symptoms attendant upon functional and organic diseases of the distinctly feminine organs.

A host of medical authorities of all the several schools of practice, recommend each of the several ingredients of which "Favorite Prescription" is made for the cure of the diseases for which it is claimed to be a cure. You may read what they say for yourself by sending a postal card request for a free booklet of extracts from the leading authorities, to Doctor R. V. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., and it will come to you by return post.

SONOMA INDEX-TRIBUNE

Sonoma, Sonoma County, Cal., August 17, 1907.

H. H. GRANICE, Editor.

Sonoma County's Missouri Method.

SONOMA county, as was long ago predicted, is coming to be known as the wonder county of California. We have never had any "boosters" at work for us and little or no promotion work has been done as compared with other sections. It has taken longer for us to come to the surface for it has been through the development of genius and wonders, which are the natural growth of our county, that it has been demonstrated to the world that Sonoma county produces the marvelous. You cannot down the truth or keep back the truly great, for despite all obstacles the "fittest" and finest struggle to the light, and the world sooner or later recognizes and appreciates. We can vie with the Blue Grass State as to fine stock, and particularly horses, for very recently Sonoma Girl's record on the turf was wired around the world and by the wise naming of the high-class mare our county becomes known through the speed marvel and is advertised accordingly.

The poultry industry, in which we excel, has been another means of bringing Sonoma county to the front. The quantity of produce which is shipped from our egg center has made the world sit up and take notice. There is a crow for Sonoma county in every egg that goes out of here.

The finest California wines are synonomous now throughout the country with Sonoma county for they have won for this section the highest commendation. Bacchus lays laurels at our doorstep coming all the way from the Rhine and Bordeaux to acknowledge our right to fame in the growing of grapes and the making of wine.

Luther Burbank is another marvel who is synonomous with Sonoma county for it is here within our own domain that he chose to carry on the great work which has revolutionized the horticulture and plant growing of the world. He achieved success in Sonoma county, his experimental garden. He has become known as the "wizard" and Sonoma as his wonderland. "Nothing succeeds like success" and it is a conservative belief that Sonoma county will have the other counties of the State eclipsed for fame and be known all over the globe before many months if our wonders continue to throw us in the limelight. This kind of a growth is no boom. The world is interested in this section because we have "shown them" but having aroused the interest which makes the interested anxious to known us better, let us give them all the information we can through illustrated literature and other means.

The Plaint of the Teddy Bear.

Have you noticed a tear in the Teddy bear's eye?
Look close and perhaps you can see
The pitiful look in his little brown face
Since he's heard of the latest decree

He's been held so close and so dear to the heart
Of the little girl he's learned to love
That all of the friends of the woods and the glens
He's forgot for this new gentle dove.

One time he'd have played with the wolverines gray
Or frisked after rabbits so jolly
But he bade them farewell and came here to dwell
Just to play at being a dolly.

He was named for the President, yes, such an honor
Was never accorded quadruped
And soon he found out that girls made him gay
And life was not a bit stupid.

He was not stage struck yet who could resist
The applause that resounded one night
When he made his debut on the chorus girl's arm
Right out in the calcium light

But, alas, in the midst of all this ovation
While being so showered with blisses
Came rumors that he was being tabooed
By the straight-laced, particular misses

Who were jealous and said that he'd cut out the dolls
That the Teddy bear must "to the woods."
And now he's afraid for every dear child
Lest they be caught with the goods.

And so he's decided to steal away now
To drop out of sight since he must
To that land where fashion and fancy take wing
A cynic with memories of dust.

A COMMENDABLE effort is being made throughout the county to have a creditable display of Sonoma products at the State Fair.

THEY HAVE begun to advocate new designs for coins. We have designs "a plenty" on the ones now in circulation.

Cows Roasted Alive.

One hundred and thirty cows were burned to death at the Valencia dairy, Chileno valley, Monday night. The animals were in their stalls when the barn was discovered to be on fire, and before anything could be done the flames were beyond control and the terrified cows literally roasted alive. They were owned by W. M. Luis.

Genial Jim Daly Passes Away.

Genial Jim Daly, well known throughout the valley, died in a San Francisco sanitarium Monday. He had been complaining sometime but death was hastened by an acute attack of pneumonia. He was a brother of Wm. Daly and leaves a young daughter, Marion, to whom he was most devoted.

Mr. Daly spent many of his young days in this valley and had interests here up to the time of his death. He was born in Petaluma where his father was one of the pioneer grocers.

Jack London Dines With "Princess" Alice.

Jack London and his plucky little wife are still in Honolulu, and, according to all accounts, are enlivening their adventurous trip with a little social diversion. They recently dined with "Princess" Alice Roosevelt Longworth and her husband in the islands. Thus celebrities meet across the ocean. The President's daughter is said to have been bored with most of the social doings of Hawaii but her ennui departed with the informality and repartee of the Jack London dinner where nature fakers and other things strictly American were talked of in a real heart to heart way.

Clewe Becomes an Elk.

Will Clewe, with an escort of Sonoma members of the Elks, went to Santa Rosa Wednesday night to be put through the mysteries of initiation into that popular order. Clewe is one of many Sonoma young men who are now members of the Santa Rosa lodge. His vanguard took good care of him until he was turned over to the big pronged potentates who conducted the initiation ceremonies. Those who went from here for the occasion were Messrs. Lewis, Kelly, Hocker, Burris, Cummings and Thomson. A lusty young rooster accompanied the brothers as mascot but whether its function was ultimately that of the hot bird which accompanied the cold bottles or not is still a matter of conjecture.

University Extension in Agriculture.

Excellent reading courses for home study are now provided by the extension department of the University College of Agriculture. Two such courses are offered at the present time: one in Economic Entomology and the other in Irrigation Practice and Institutions. These courses may be looked upon as an outward growth of the Farmers' Institutes and are designed to amplify and broaden the work of such meetings. Enrollment is hedged about by no difficulties. Anyone desiring to read up on the subjects offered, in a systematic way, may enroll and literature will be furnished free of cost save transportation from and to Berkeley.

Farmers' Institutes will be conducted at Pacific Grove on August 20th and 21st and at Capitola on the 23d and 24th.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucuous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of deafness (caused by Catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

The only remnant of the Board of Trade, which has been so zealously sought by those interested in Sonoma's progression, has been dug up through the notice of the search in last week's INDEX-TRIBUNE. The discovered specimen is a fine one, and by a new scientific process discovered in the laboratory of the Sonoma Valley Woman's Club, it is quite probable that the fossils can be revivified and transformed into real live wires.

WALTER BURRIS SUES HIS DOCTOR.

Brings $25,000 Damage Suit For Malpractice Against Dr. Huntington.

Walter Burris, who has been ill for some time has filed a sensational suit for $25,000 damages against Dr. Huntington, of San Francisco, alleging malpractice. Burris claims that the physician suggested and performed an operation on his leg which caused him paralysis and that the operation, which consisted of making an incision in the limb, was wholly unnecessary and not in accordance with medical judgment. As a result he was deprived of the use of his leg and spent $500 in an effort to cure the paralysis which resulted. He prays for $25,000 damages and the $500 expended for relief. The physician has not filed an answer to the suit as yet, but admits treating Burris who came up from the San Joaquin to consult him.

The outcome of the case will be watched with keen interest all over the country where Mr. Burris is well known and prominently connected.

THE BAY HORSE.

An Old Arab Legend That Tells of His Unmatched Speed.

The bay colored horse is said to be the swiftest of all the horses. A story to illustrate this is told of a certain Arab sheik who, having been engaged in a fight with another tribe, was taking his flight with his little son.

They were both mounted on a magnificent white mare which belonged to the sheik and which had always been highly valued on account of the great speed at which it could go. After having ridden some little distance the sheik asked his son to look around and see if they were being followed. The boy replied that there was some one riding after them on a black horse. The sheik seemed satisfied on hearing this report, but presently repeated his question. The boy answered that they were still being pursued, but that this time the horse was white. "Never mind," said the father; "mine is faster."

In a few minutes he asked for a further report, and the reply was the same, with the difference that the horse was a chestnut. The shiek, however, put his question a fourth time, but upon being told by his son that the pursuer was mounted on a bay he cried out, "Then we are lost, for there is no horse which it cannot overtake." His words proved to be true, for in a short time they were caught up with and captured.

LEATHER BOUND BOOKS.

A Little Vaseline Improves and Preserves the Binding.

An official of the Congressional library was talking with a friend who recently had purchased a handsome set of leather bound volumes and said:

"You had better examine those volumes carefully to see if the leather needs feeding. If it is new stock they will be all right let alone for several years, but if they have been on the shelves for some time the leather will have lost most of its natural oil and become brittle. This applies especially to books kept in private houses, which are as a rule much hotter than the book stacks of a large library. There is nothing more attractive than a fresh, well preserved leather binding on a volume and scarcely anything less so than a dilapidated, cracked one.

"You can add years to the life of a leather binding and a hundred per cent to its appearance by rubbing in a little vaseline with a piece of raw cotton—not too much, just as much as the leather will thoroughly absorb. Where the binding bends is where it is most likely to crack. The leather will not be greasy, as the vaseline will be absorbed. One treatment every year or two is sufficient unless the books are unduly exposed to heat."—Washington Star.

Within Her Rights.

A very black woman in a silver gray automobile coat was seen a few mornings ago hauling an unwilling and disreputable looking yellow dog by a leather thong.

A friendly disposed policeman asked casually: "Why don't you turn the dog loose? He don't look able to run off, and nobody'll want to steal him?"

"Ain't I a 'oman?' was the tart query.

There was no disputing the fact.

"Ain't dis heah a dog?"

Patent fact.

"Ain't dis heah New York?"

Obviously true.

"Well, ain't I got a good right to walk on dese heah streets and put on all the style I choose?"

No disputing a self evident proposition.—New York Times.

Impartial.

An English clergyman, recently settled in a small town in Perthshire, met a farmer's boy while visiting the members of his congregation. In the course of conversation the boy said his parents had an aunt staying with them. The parson, not having much acquaintance with the Scottish language and not quite comprehending what the boy said, asked:

"Then, do I understand that your aunt is on your father's side or on your mother's?"

To which the young agriculturist replied:

"Weel, whiles the ane an whiles the ither, excep' when feyther leathers them baith."—Dundee Advertiser.

Man's Precious Rib.

A young lady having asked a surgeon why woman was made from the rib of man in preference to another bone, he gave her the following gallant answer: "She was not taken from the head lest she should rule over him, nor from his feet lest he should trample upon her; but she was taken from his side, that she might be his equal; from under his arm, that he might protect her; from near his heart, that he might cherish and love her." — Houston Chronicle.

Poor Colors.

"I can't understand Mabel."

"Why not?"

"She's always trying to get things to match her complexion."

"What of it?"

"Haven't you ever noticed her complexion?"—Milwaukee Sentinel.

What Changed His Mind.

"I had supposed until yesterday, doctor, that the days of the bleeding of patients were past."

"And so they are. But what changed your mind?"

"The bill you sent me."

Hustle While You Wait.

While waiting for your prayer to be answered try to get what you want yourself.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

Remedy for Diarrhoea Never Known to Fail.

"I want to say a few words for Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. I have used this preparation in my family for the past five years and have recommended it to a number of people in York county and have never known it to fail to effect a cure in any instance. I feel that I cannot say too much for the best remedy of the kind in the world.—S. JEMISON, Spring Grove, York County, Pa. This remedy is for sale by L. S. Simmons.

EDIBLE COFFINS.

Pastry Making In the Early Stages of English Cookery.

At a very early period the orientals were familiar with a kind of pastry, a mixture of flour, oil and honey, and for centuries pastry making went no further, even among the nations in the south of Europe. But in the beginning of the middle ages a change began to take place in the method of mixing the ingredients, and some other substances were brought into use. Butter, eggs and salt found their way into pastry making, and the result was a manifest improvement. Paste next came to be used as an inclosure for meat, seasoned with spices, etc. Afterward it went a step further, the next use being for the inclosure of creams, fruit, preserves, etc., and later still it began to take the many fanciful shapes in which it has since been commonly found. In the early stages of English cookery the pastry cases were called coffins or "coffynes" and were made in various sizes from "gret coffynes with lowe liddes" for the "tartes of fliesche" to the "smalle coffynes" for "tartolettes" of "fische or fliesche," mixed with "stuf of boylled figges ground and good powdure and spices."

Petruchio in "The Taming of the Shrew," it may here be noted, calls a little cap "a custard coffin." These coffins correspond with the "vol-au-vent" of today.—London Saturday Review.

THE LOST SOVEREIGN.

A Trick That Is Sometimes Played on the London Cabby.

Have you ever tried to play on a cabman that old joke of the "lost sovereign?" It's very funny. A friend tried it last summer in London and succeeded too. He took a "growler" after midnight at Piccadilly Circus to go to his lodgings at Bayswater. Remembering the staleness of the "lost sovereign" dodge, he thought it would hardly "go down" with a bright, cunning cabby, but resolved to try for the fun of it.

Just as he came in front of a public house a few doors from his home the "fare" stuck his head out of the cab window and ordered the driver to halt. "I say, cabby, I've dropped a 'sov.' It must be on the bottom of the cab. Just pull up at that 'pub.' till I run in and get a match, so that I can find the coin."

"All right, sir," said the cabby and pulled up opposite the door of the tavern. The fare alighted and had taken scarcely three steps in the direction of the "pub." when, lo, Mr. Cabby whipped up his horse and flew away into the darkness of the night, carrying with him, as he supposed, that sovereign snugly concealed in the cushions of the cab.—London Tit-Bits.

How Snake Poison Kills.

The action of poisons upon the system is and always has been one of the most interesting of subjects. Just how and why it kills have been determined through a series of experiments made by scientists. The following description is one of the best and most lucid of any that has been given to the public: "The venom may be roughly separated into two parts, one acting upon the blood and the other upon the nerves. When injected it immediately begins to create terrible destruction in the blood vessels. The walls of the veins are eaten away, and an internal hemorrhage takes place. While this is going on a portion of the venom is attacking the nerves. Particularly susceptible to its ravages is the 'vasomotor' system, a nerve center which controls the muscles of respiration. Paralysis takes place in these organs, and the victim generally dies from an inability to breathe."—Exchange.

A Pleasant Sort of Sea.

The power of the surf is a thing about which many of us have but the most hazy ideas, and indeed the ordinary conditions with which we are surrounded prevent us from fully appreciating what it can be at times. The people of the island of Chincoteague, which is about a mile and a half wide, have, however, opportunities for judging this experience, which they must find the reverse of pleasant. On its eastern side and between it and the ocean is Assateague island, which is also a mile and a half wide, but the power with which the waves come is so great that at some places the surf sweeps entirely over both islands.—London Standard.

A Talented House Agent.

Mrs. Homeseeker — You certainly don't expect anybody to take this house! Why, the floors all run down hill. Agent (a smart man)—It was built in that way on purpose, mum, to keep peace in the family. Greatest invention of the age, mum. Mrs. Homeseeker—Keep peace in the family? What do you mean? Agent—It's all right, mum; nothing like it. Whenever your husband drops his collar buttons they'll roll down to that wall, and he'll always know where to find 'em.—London Tit-Bits.

A Comparison.

"I admit I have the fault you mention," said the conceited man, self complacently, "but it's the only fault I have, and it's a small one."

"Yes," replied Knox, "just like the small hole that makes a plugged nickel no good."—Philadelphia Press.

Ought to Survive.

Anxious Mother—Oh, doctor, do you think Robbie will get well? Doctor—No doubt of it; no doubt of it. I've given him medicine for everything that he could possibly have, so we're bound to strike it right.—Toledo Blade.

There is nothing so easy but that it becomes difficult when you do it with reluctance.—Terence.
